discussion of the principles of the theory of the function of the mind. It is shown that the mind is not a passive organ, but an active organ, and that it is capable of receiving information from the external world, and of processing this information in such a way as to produce a response. This response is the result of the mind's activity, and it is this activity that is the subject of the theory of the function of the mind.
